Teaching philosophy:

Firstly, I follow the philosophy of the enlightening of minds, preparing generations with the skill of creative scientific thinking with holding the spirit of constructive criticism, and possessing the ability to deal with the different subjects of the field being studied.

Secondly, I seek through the teaching to strengthen the students' ability of legal thinking by addressing and hinting to comparative laws, along with addressing issues that are not agreed upon by jurisprudence and judiciary so it urges the students to express their opinions and ideas about developing or criticizing the legal solutions to the disputed contemporary issues (i.e. the raised issues).

Thirdly, I work to raise the values of science, education, learning, justice, objectivity, seriousness, and dealing with a human spirit in a way that does not violate the laws, customs and traditions of the society and the university, also to follow up the latest developments in the field of specialization and to provide a contemporary scientific article.

Fourthly, I pay great attention to the university book, by working on the authoring of a book containing an adequate scientific substance in the field of specialization, to contribute to opening wide horizons of legal knowledge to students in the relevant study stage or beyond.

Fifth, to make students aware of many judicial papers in practice (such as a statement of a case and appeals forms, judicial notification forms, defense briefs, court judgments, attachment records and papers, etc.) to bring closer the information to the students' minds and make it firm in their minds. I also make sure that the exam includes practical questions, derived, in part of them, from facts that have been addressed in judicial rulings or decisions.
